

TUESDAY, APRIL 30, 2019 – 7 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Our pleasant and persistent weather pattern continues. High pressure is sprawled across the region. The low-level moisture has crept up some. This will result in a few more cumulus clouds around, dew points in the 60s, and some light coastal showers that will try to develop today and tomorrow. These light showers would likely dissipate if they drifted over Timuquana. The deterioration of weather here will wait until after our championship. As far as winds, practically a duplication of yesterday – light winds to start, then an east-southeast wind becomes established with top wind speeds near 16 mph by mid-afternoon. Winds are nearly the same tomorrow, but with top wind speeds in the afternoon closer to 18 mph, with a few higher gusts. We continue with very low chances (10% or less, except 20% for tomorrow afternoon) for any rain. High temperatures today and tomorrow close to 85 degrees, along with overnight lows near 70.
