

SUNDAY, MAY 21st, 2023 – 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Clouds will slowly increase through the morning as a swath of precipitation begins to make its way southeast across central South Carolina. Some of these showers will struggle to reach the coastal locations, but sprinkles to showers are not ruled out through the morning. Temperatures will tip near 80 degrees with the chance for a shower and even some rumbles of thunder this afternoon. As a cold front slips just south of us later this evening, winds will begin to shift back easterly with a few leftover showers/sprinkles across the area. The abnormal northeasterly flow takes back control and churns back up starting on Monday with gusts occasionally tipping near the mid 20s in the afternoon. The aforementioned front to our south will try to nudge north into portions of Hilton Head and Savannah, early to mid week, which can threaten another unwanted chance for a shower or two. Temperatures will be slightly cooler than average the remainder of the week with this strong northeasterly flow and decrease of surface moisture.
