

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2023 – 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Yesterday evening's cluster dropped 0.14" of rainfall as we yet again escaped the worst. Today we look to do more of the same, with the threat of lingering showers and additional afternoon pop-ups. This system is destined to slowly move out during the day, exiting by nightfall. We welcome a pleasant Tuesday morning in the low 60s, with partial sunshine throughout the day. A slight chance of some showers rolls in Tuesday afternoon, but these chances are much lower than recent days. The next system to be concerned about is a faster-moving cold front, arriving Tuesday night into Wednesday morning. Impacts are spread across Wednesday, but I would expect a few hours of the worst conditions to include heavy rain rates. The timing is extremely fragile and not yet agreed upon by models, so prepare for impacts on Wednesday at this time. Thursday is going to be an absolute sigh of relief with temperatures in the low 70s and clean, dry air.
