

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 19th, 2022 – 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Those lucky rainbows yesterday really lifted the spirits and kept us from being the afternoon hotspot for the showers and storms. Let's continue to dry up some of those saturated portions of the course this morning with some nice sunshine and temperatures pushing up in the mid to upper 80s by lunchtime. Our Heat Index will once again briefly tip near the low 100s and reinforce the idea of finding periodic shade. A light, but predominant southerly wind will guide us in the afternoon, before the sea breeze moves onshore later in the afternoon. Radar will be much similar to yesterday with a 40% chance of isolated pop-ups, turning into more scattered showers and storms along the coast. This 40% chance will hold on into the evening and early overnight as a few isolated showers and storms will linger across the area. Tuesday morning will be a repeat of today and with the chances for a pop-up increasing by the early afternoon. Hurricane Fiona will lift back northeast towards Bermuda Wednesday and turn our winds primarily out of the north and east, which will help slowly reduce some of our moisture into the Final Rounds.
