

SATURDAY, AUGUST 19, 2023 – 10 AM WEATHER FORECAST

The showers and storms that were scattered around our area yesterday afternoon dropped 0.03” of rain at Cherry Hills. The forecast for today is slightly better than yesterday, but still features a chance of storms this afternoon. First we’ll start off this morning with lots of sunshine through mid morning as temps quickly climb through the 80s. We’ll be in the 90s again by noon when clouds will have started billowing up over the mountains. Highs will eventually reach the mid 90s this afternoon with the first few echoes on radar occurring to our northwest over the higher elevations around or shortly after lunchtime. So for the first nine holes today we should be more in the 20% chance region with a 40% risk of showers and storms coming during the second nine holes as we’ll see cells popping on radar closer to our area, especially in the usual 3 to 6 PM window. The good news is that we are on the southern end of the action today with the worst of the weather taking place to our north and west from Boulder up to Cheyenne and in their adjacent mountains. Wind will be mainly light and variable with gusts over 10 mph associated with any cells later on this afternoon. Light winds early Sunday will transition to gustier conditions during the afternoon with sunny, but hot weather expected.
