

SUNDAY, AUGUST 20, 2023 – 7 AM WEATHER FORECAST

The showers and storms that came through Cherry Hills yesterday evening dropped 0.11" of rain before clearing out overnight. Today we are left with a very different weather picture as Tropical Storm Hilary headed to Southern California will throw high clouds across Colorado today. Therefore look for our sunshine to be filtered by those high clouds as much of the atmosphere has dried a lot compared to the last few days. In fact, it is so dry today that the National Weather Service has issued a Red Flag Warning for critical fire weather conditions since dewpoints in the 50s this morning will plummet towards 30 degrees this afternoon indicating how dry it is going to be with increasing winds. Light winds this morning will pick up around lunchtime creating a very different afternoon match. South to southeast winds this afternoon will get into the teens before we finish play and will be gusting above 20 mph at times before reaching a max gust of 30 mph or so late today. That southerly flow will aid in getting our temps from the upper 50s at dawn all the way into the upper 90s this afternoon. There is a 0% chance of rain today through tonight into Monday morning, then there may be a slim 20% risk of a shower or storm Monday afternoon as clouds begin building in the mountains once again.
