

THURSDAY, AUGUST 17, 2023 – 8 AM WEATHER FORECAST

After play finished last evening all the showers and storms in the area quickly dissipated once the sun went down and left us with another mainly clear and comfortable start to today. The weak little front that we have discussed on and off this week is washing out as it falls apart through Denver giving us a slightly better forecast for today's play. Mostly sunny skies this morning will mix with some clouds by mid afternoon as showers and storms in the mountains try to make their way here. The vast majority of what develops on radar will stay away from Cherry Hills, but there could be a dry thunderstorm drifting nearby keeping eyes focused in the weather room by 6 PM or so. Temps will warm up a bit more gradually today with lighter winds this morning as highs this afternoon reach the lower 90s when south to southeast winds become gustier. Friday's forecast is fine in the morning, then the afternoon hours will resemble yesterday afternoon. Saturday's threat of afternoon storms is a little less than yesterday and Friday with more hit or miss action as Sunday's forecast has trended hotter and drier.
