

SATURDAY, AUGUST 27th, 2022 – 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

We saw quite the light show on our way home last night, but only had 0.04" of rainfall here at The Kittansett Club. The cold front has now dipped just south of us and introduced a northwest wind to start the day under mostly sunny skies and temperatures struggling to climb in the upper 70s. Overall, a nice day in store with our winds rotating towards the northeast under an increase in clouds this morning and afternoon. Our surface moisture will slowly decrease into the weekend with dew points falling through the upper to mid 60s today, eventually in the low 60s/upper 50s tomorrow, making it feel a tad cooler around. High pressure that was overhead will slip off to our northeast and drive our flow back southerly into early next week. Temperatures slowly trend back into the low and mid 80s for our high in addition to the return of the humidity. These southwest winds will once again sharpen Tuesday into Wednesday with the next chances in seeing a shower or storm with the approach of the next system.
