Golf’s greatest moments deserve the best mobile network — and now they have it. T-Mobile (NASDAQ: TMUS) and the United States Golf Association (USGA) today announced a multi-year partnership, making T-Mobile the Official 5G Network Partner of the U.S. Women’s Open Presented by Ally, U.S. Open and additional USGA championships. Through the partnership, T-Mobile is delivering the USGA's first-ever mobile Rules Review, critical event connectivity and exclusive member experiences — setting a new standard at the sport's biggest events, powering the action on the course and the experience around it.

"The USGA has shaped the game of golf for more than a century, and this partnership marks an exciting expansion of T-Mobile's growing presence in the sport," said Amy Azzi, VP of Sponsorships, T-Mobile. "T-Mobile is bringing new innovation to championship operations — including a first-of-its-kind Rules Review powered by America's Best Network — while creating more connected, immersive moments for fans at golf's biggest events."

"T-Mobile shares our belief that the best moments in golf deserve to be experienced at the highest level — by the players competing for a title, the officials upholding the integrity of the game, and the fans following every shot,” said Jon Podany, Chief Commercial Officer, USGA. “This partnership gives us the tools to deliver on that across the board, from real-time Rules Review on the course to connected experiences for our members and fans. We're proud to have T-Mobile as a partner and excited about what we can build together.”

5G at the Heart of Every Moment

The USGA partnership puts T-Mobile at the core of major championship events, starting this year at the U.S. Women’s Open at The Riviera Country Club in Pacific Palisades, Calif. and U.S. Open at Shinnecock Hills Golf Club in Southampton, N.Y., and extending to the USGA’s additional national championships. The USGA will use T-Mobile’s network and capabilities to transform how its events are run and experienced — proving how 5G can elevate the game — for players, fans and officials.

Here’s what T-Mobile is bringing to life with the USGA in 2026:

T-Mobile 5G powers a first-of-its-kind rules review: Unlike most sports, golf doesn't have a sideline. The USGA, the governing body of golf in the United States, its territories, and Mexico, deploys officials across its championships, making rulings while play continues around them. With the potential for championship-defining rulings happening in the moment, enhanced 5G network connectivity empowers officials with immediate access to the tools and communication capabilities needed to make faster decisions. Debuting at the U.S. Women's Open and expanding to other championships, USGA rules officials will use an optimized 5G network slice when they are on the course to ensure the right information reaches them instantly, when it matters most. Equipped with 5G-connected devices, officials can access video footage and communicate in real time with others on the officiating team to deliver rulings from anywhere on the course, without delays or dead zones.

Powering the championship from first scan to the final putt: T-Mobile’s 5G Advanced Network Solutions (ANS) will help connect multiple layers of operations at the U.S. Women’s Open and U.S. Open. Starting at the Women’s Open next month, an optimized network slice will be used to power ticket scanning and select point-of-sale terminals at USGA events, so spectators can get in faster and vendors can serve them virtually anywhere on the grounds. The USGA content team will use T-Mobile’s photojournalism network slicing capability for rapid content delivery, uploading and sharing shots from virtually anywhere on the course the moment they happen, so fans watching from home get closer to the action in real time.
