The players are Kristen Gillman, 20, of Austin, Texas; Jennifer Kupcho, 21, of Westminster, Colo.; and Lilia Vu, 20, of Fountain Valley, Calif., for the USA Women's Team and Cole Hammer, 18, of Houston, Texas; Collin Morikawa, 21, of La Canada Flintridge, Calif.; and Justin Suh, 21, of San Jose, Calif.

"We are thrilled that this group will represent the United States during this international competition," said Mark Newell, president of the USGA. "The World Amateur Team Championships carry such a rich competitive history, and these six golfers will undoubtedly represent our organization and our country as talented competitors and worthy ambassadors of the game."

The World Amateur Team Championships are conducted by the International Golf Federation (IGF). The IGF also conducts the golf competitions in the Olympic Games and Youth Olympic Games.

Gillman, a rising junior at the University of Alabama, is coming off her second U.S. Women's Amateur Championship win, defeating incoming teammate Jiwon Jeon, 7 and 6, at the Golf Club of Tennessee earlier this month. Gillman, who is currently No. 3 in the Women's World Amateur Golf Ranking™ (WAGR), was a member of this summer's victorious USA Curtis Cup Team. During the Match, Gillman went 5-0-0 to become just the third person to win in every session since the format was expanded to a three-day competition in 2008. During her sophomore season at Alabama, she was named First Team All-American for the second straight year, as well as garnering First Team All-SEC honors. Gillman finished T27 in the 2018 U.S. Women's Open and was a member of the 2014 USA Women's World Amateur Team.

Kupcho, a rising senior at Wake Forest University, was recently awarded the 2018 Mark H. McCormack Medal, given annually by the USGA and The R&A to the leading female amateur. She is currently No. 1 in the WAGR, and has spent five weeks in the top position this year. Kupcho, also a member of the 2018 USA Curtis Cup Team, won the 2018 NCAA Division I individual championship en route to five individual collegiate wins in her junior season. In addition, she set the school record with a 70.6 scoring average this year.

Vu, a rising senior at UCLA, is No. 2 in the WAGR after spending 19 weeks at No. 1 over the past year, including 18 consecutive weeks beginning in March. A member of the victorious 2018 USA Curtis Cup Team, Vu finished third in this summer's Canadian Women's Amateur Championship, as well as third in the Southern California Women's Amateur Championship. Her junior season also featured four individual collegiate titles.

Stasia Collins, past chairman of the USGA Women's Committee, will serve as captain of the USA Women's World Amateur Team.

"I am honored to have the opportunity to serve as captain to these outstanding players," said Collins. "These three women are not only incredibly talented and seasoned competitors, but they are also wonderful individuals who will represent our country tremendously well."

The alternates, in order, are Lauren Stephenson, 21, of Lexington, S.C., and Lucy Li, 15, of Redwood Shores, Calif.

Hammer, who made it to the semifinals of the U.S. Amateur Championship this week at Pebble Beach Golf Links, is an incoming freshman at the University of Texas. Currently No. 17 in the WAGR, Hammer had an incredibly successful summer, winning the 2018 Western Amateur as well as advancing to the semifinals of the U.S. Junior Amateur Championship. In the spring, he won the Azalea Invitational, as well as the U.S. Amateur Four-Ball Championship with partner Garrett Barber.

Morikawa, a senior at University of California, Berkeley, is coming off a junior season in which he won two collegiate individual titles and earned 11 Top-20 finishes en route to claiming First Team All-American honors. Currently No. 3 in the WAGR, Morikawa made the cut in the PGA Tour's Arnold Palmer Invitational in March.

Suh, a junior at USC, has competed in eight USGA championships and advanced to match play in three consecutive U.S. Amateurs. In 2018, Suh was chosen Pac-12 Conference Player of the Year, captured the Pac-12 Championship and established USC's single-season records for stroke average (68.73) and rounds in the 60s (21). He is currently No. 2 in the WAGR, and in June won the Northeast Amateur.

"The consistency these three young men have as high-quality players is unquestioned and they will be excellent representatives of the USA," said Thomas J. O'Toole Jr., USA team captain and former president of the USGA. "They are no strangers to USGA competition and we are excited to have them play at Carton House for the USA."

The alternates, in order, are Shintaro Ban, 22, of San Jose, Calif., and Chandler Phillips, 21, of Huntsville, Texas.

Earlier this summer, the USGA announced a series of revisions to the association's selection process for international teams that provide for some automatic selections, as well as creating more transparency into how the remaining selections are made. The selection process now automatically names the best-ranked USA players in the WAGR as of pre-determined dates (Kupcho/Suh) as well as an American U.S. Women's Amateur (Gillman) and U.S. Amateur champion. The selections of Hammer, Morikawa and Vu were decided by the USGA's International Team

Selection Committee.
